The Kunsthaus is a multifaceted museum: four buildings, a rich and varied collection and a wide-ranging mediation programme that spark dialogues between various time periods and geographies – from Rembrandt van Rijn, Alberto Giacometti, Claude Monet and Edvard Munch to the Zurich Dadaists and Pipilotti Rist, Kiki Kogelnik and Sonja Sekula.

That polyphony is also reflected in our annual programme: ‘Claes Oldenburg: Soft Serve’ looks back at the golden years of Pop Art; for ‘House of Nisaba: New Stories of Painting’, more than 30 artists from around the world have developed new work; while Wael Shawky and Ai Weiwei open up novel perspectives on the ways in which history manifests in the present. At the centre of it all is a museum that embraces openness – a place that has always fostered exchange between different worlds and continues to do so in 2027.

Maria Lassnig and Edvard Munch Flow of Paint = Flow of Life

What does it mean to be aware of yourself – and make your way in the world? Maria Lassnig (1919, Kappel am Krappfeld – 2014, Vienna) and Edvard Munch (1863, Løten – 1944, Ekely near Oslo) used painting as the setting for a radical interrogation of the self. They painted fear and longing and employed colour as a force of expression. The Kunsthaus Zürich, which holds the largest collection of paintings by Munch outside Scandinavia, is the perfect place to stage a dialogue between these two remarkable artists. For the first time, a major exhibition with more than 150 works brings the Austrian artist and the Norwegian painter together for an encounter that reveals some striking parallels and new insights into their work.

Ralph Lemon and Kevin Beasley Residuum

The Kunsthaus becomes a 'sound house', as Ralph Lemon (b. 1952, Cincinnati), one of the most influential performance artists of his generation, and Kevin Beasley (b. 1985, Lynchburg), whose work combines performance, sound and sculpture, present a multi-channel sound installation on all four floors of the Müller building. The presentation highlights fifteen years of Lemon's practice in dance, performance and visual art, and emerges from the long-standing collaboration between the two artists. On 12 and 13 December 2026, Lemon and his ensemble of performers will present a series of performances within the installation.

Judith Bernstein MINE'S BIGGER THAN YOURS

Radical, uncompromising and ever-topical, Judith Bernstein (b. 1942, Newark) is a pioneering figure in feminist art. Since first coming to public attention with her monumental charcoal phallus drawings – a form of protest against sexism and testosterone-driven militarism – she has been investigating patriarchal oppression and power for five decades. The exhibition brings together works from the beginning of her artistic career to the present day, from early pieces created in response to the Vietnam War, through the iconic, large-format 'Screws' drawings of the 1970s, to the 'Birth of the Universe' series created just a few years ago.

Enrico David

Enrico David's figures defy unambiguous categorization. They are fragile, sometimes masked or grotesque, yet always delicate. In a poetically theatrical way, they become the protagonists in a silent drama revolving around one of the great questions of all time: what defines being human? Born in Ancona in 1966 and now working in London, David sees painting, textile, embroidery, paper, ceramic and sculpture as equally valid means of expression and uses them to create figures that oscillate between body and costume, person and role. The presentation brings together works from various phases of his career with a subtle, concise selection of works from the Kunsthhaus collection. The result is a fascinating encounter with one of the present day's most exciting Italian artists.

The exhibition has been organized by the Kunsthhaus Zürich and the Castello di Rivoli Museo d'Arte Contemporanea, Rivoli-Turin.

House of Nisaba New Stories of Painting

Painting flourishes, once again, in the 21st century. Nisaba, the Mesopotamian goddess of grain, writing and storytelling, lends her name to this exhibition on contemporary painting. Artists from around the world are developing distinctive pictorial languages, using new allegorical imagery and modes of storytelling – for a world in which images circulate constantly and shared symbol systems are giving way to highly individual meanings. Nearly 35 artists are creating new works for this exhibition, inspired by mythology, literature, film, social media and popular culture. With Soufiane Ababri, Michael Armitage, Omar Ba, Sabian Baumann, Cornel Brudascu, Nicole Eisenman, Hamishi Farah, Jill Mulleady, Valentin Rilliet, Cinga Samson, Selma Selman, Mounira Al Solh, Salman Toor and others. The exhibition architecture is being developed by the renowned design and architecture studio Formafantasma.

The exhibition is a collaboration with the Moderna Museet, Stockholm.

Wael Shawky

History is never a straightforward record of events: everything depends on who is telling the story. Wael Shawky (b. 1971, Alexandria, lives in western Asia), a leading multimedia artist, shifts perspectives and destabilizes certainties. In virtuoso films, installations and musical theatre productions, he combines multiple artistic disciplines and shows human beings caught up in a web of political, religious and social forces. The exhibition brings together the celebrated ‘Cabaret Crusades’ trilogy (2010–2014), which uses puppets to recount the history of the Crusades from an Arab perspective, and ‘Drama 1882’ (2024), a filmed opera about British colonialism in Egypt. A new film installation on the history of the Gulf region will have its European premiere at the Kunsthaus Zürich.

Claes Oldenburg Soft Serve

A huge ice-cream cone, a sagging light switch made of fabric and an oversized pistol: in the works of Claes Oldenburg (1929, Stockholm – 2022, New York), the world is as strange as in 'Alice in Wonderland'. In an era of climate change and political upheaval, Pop Art pioneer Oldenburg is as topical as ever and prompts us to rethink consumption, value and our relationship with everyday objects. There is good reason to stage this exhibition in the Dada city of Zurich. Dada, born out of sharp protest against the horrific absurdities of World War I, is characterized by a radical rejection of logic, reason and traditional values. Oldenburg revives those ideas and connects them to the everyday and consumer culture of his time. With his sharp wit and absurd contrasts, he still challenges traditional artistic taste.

This first posthumous retrospective in Europe is a collaboration with the Moderna Museet, Stockholm.

'Rembrandt and his Circle' presents exceptional works from The Leiden Collection, co-founded by Dr Thomas S. Kaplan and Daphne Recanati Kaplan, home to over a dozen paintings by Rembrandt and one of the world's most significant private collections of Dutch 17th-century art. For the first time in Switzerland, visitors will have the opportunity to see more than forty works from the Collection by Rembrandt and talented members of his circle – including Jan Lievens, Gerrit Dou, Carel Fabritius, Willem Drost and Arent de Gelder. Also on view will be 'Young Woman Seated at a Virginal', the only painting by Johannes Vermeer to remain in private hands.

The Collection

Since its opening in 1910 in the heart of Zurich, the collection of the Kunsthaus Zürich has been a living organism. Works from the 13th century to the present day, from a medieval religious painting to a 21st-century immersive installation, engage in dialogue – with each other, with the here and now, and with the people who encounter them.

From Rembrandt to Monet, Picasso and Rist

The story began in 1787, when the Zürcher Kunstgesellschaft was established by a group of artists, laying the foundation for the collection we know today. Initially, the focus was on Swiss art, but the purchase of a work by Henri Matisse broadened the horizon to European and, later, international art. Today, the collection spans more than 800 years of Western art history.

Highlights include French painting from Romanticism to Modernism, with works by Claude Monet, Édouard Manet, Gustave Courbet and Pierre Bonnard. Prominently represented are Henry Fuseli, Arnold Böcklin, Ferdinand Hodler, Marc Chagall, Oskar Kokoschka and Edvard Munch, along with one of the world's most extensive Dada collections. These are complemented by works of Geometric Abstraction and American post-war art – from Max Bill and Verena Loewensberg to Andy Warhol and Mark Rothko. Visitor favourites include the immersive space by Pipilotti Rist – a pixel forest of light and sound – and Refik Anadol, whose AI installation showcases the grandeur of disappearing glaciers.

Dada

In 1916, Zurich witnessed the birth of the playful, anarchistic avant-garde movement that was Dada; now, the Kunsthhaus Zürich is home to one of the world's largest Dada collections. From April onwards, a new presentation at the Kunsthhaus brings together works by Hans Arp, Hannah Höch, Man Ray and Sophie Taeuber-Arp with important precursors such as Arnold Böcklin and Giorgio de Chirico.

Alberto Giacometti

The Kunsthhaus is home to the world's most important collection of works by Alberto Giacometti, tracing the Swiss artist's career from the mountains of the Val Bregaglia to Paris, from early pieces through Surrealism to the iconic sculptures that cemented Giacometti's status as one of the 20th century's foremost sculptors.

Private collections on public display

In addition to its own collection, the Kunsthhaus hosts exceptional private collections that have their roots in Zurich.

The new 'Post-War Wing' (from spring 2027) in the Chipperfield building highlights the artistic exchange between the US and Europe after 1945. Works of Abstract Expressionism, Arte Povera and Minimal Art from the Hubert Looser Collection engage in dialogue with pieces from the Kunsthhaus's own holdings, by artists including Willem de Kooning, Donald Judd, Kiki Kogelnik and Agnes Martin.

Masterpieces by Henri Matisse, Ernst Ludwig Kirchner, Vincent van Gogh, Wassily Kandinsky and Gabriele Münter from the Merzbacher Collection serve up a feast of colour, while guiding visitors through the avant-garde movements of Classical Modernism by artists such as Kazimir Malevich and Natalia Goncharova. Now, they enter into dialogue with works of Geometric Abstraction by Piet Mondrian, Marlow Moss, Sophie Taeuber-Arp, Max Bill and Verena Loewensberg from the Kunsthhaus's own collection.

With exceptional works by Claude Monet, Auguste Renoir, Paul Cezanne, Vincent van Gogh, Paul Gauguin and Pablo Picasso, the Bührl Collection illustrates the path to Classical Modernism. The approximately 205 works are currently being presented in a classic salon hang, accompanied by an extensive research project on their provenance.

'The collection is a unique treasure trove, allowing us to explore questions of our time in dialogue with the past.'

Highlights from the Kunsthaus's collection come together for a one-off presentation in the Chipperfield building. This rare display opens up new perspectives across the ages: Jean Tinguely's monumental machine sculpture meets a painting by H. R. Giger, Pablo Picasso's 'Grand Nu' takes on a double meaning alongside Heidi Bucher's 'Divan'; and Claude Monet, Ferdinand Hodler, Paul Gauguin and Pierre Bonnard share an interest in capturing the experience of nature in visual form. This is a unique opportunity to rediscover the treasures of the Kunsthaus.

Meanwhile, another selection of highlights is making an international journey: from 27 November 2026 to 18 April 2027, the National Museum of Korea in Seoul will be presenting an exhibition of 85 masterpieces from the collection of the Kunsthaus Zürich.

Alberto Giacometti A 20th-Century Master at the Kunsthaus

From 12.3.27
Chipperfield building

Alberto Giacometti (1901, Borgonovo – 1966, Chur) is one of the most important sculptors of the modern era, and his slender figures are icons of 20th-century art. The Kunsthaus Zürich is a major international centre for researching and presenting his work, and houses more than 500 objects from the Alberto Giacometti Foundation along with around 190 from its own holdings. From March 2027, an expanded presentation in four rooms of the Chipperfield building will guide visitors through Giacometti's oeuvre: from early works and key pieces from the Surrealist phase to the slim, almost disembodied figures that are quintessential examples of modern sculpture. Sculptures, paintings and drawings all explore the question that preoccupied Giacometti throughout his life: how to capture the human being.

Müller Building A Building in Transformation

The Kunsthaus is a museum spanning four different buildings, one of which has just turned 50 and is taking on a new role. The 'Müller building', dating from 1976, with its rooms on multiple levels and high ceilings, will become a site of experiment and innovation. Half a century after it opened, the structure is returning to the original vision of its architect Erwin Müller, who envisaged the museum as an open, public square or plaza. Over the coming years, it will function as a platform for artists and curators engaging with the Kunsthaus's collection and architecture, experimenting with new forms of display, performance and curatorial formats. In this way, the Kunsthaus returns to its roots as a museum founded by artists and brings the concept of an 'artists' house' into the present day.

Ralph Lemon and Kevin Beasley, Judith Bernstein and Enrico David will be the first to inhabit the Müller building with their new projects.

Art for All

There's a way to experience art at the Kunsthaus Zürich without having to purchase a ticket: contemporary artists are invited to create new site-specific works especially for the lobby and garden of the Chipperfield building. The installations provide inspiration, give art visibility and presence outside of the exhibition spaces, and are freely accessible for everyone. We started with Jeffrey Gibson and Monster Chetwynd and will host Ai Weiwei's new large-scale installation in 2027.

In the foyer of the Chipperfield building, artists are invited to develop new site-specific installations. In 2027, world-renowned Chinese artist Ai Weiwei (b. 1957, Beijing) takes up the challenge.

In a presentation covering two floors and using thousands of toy bricks, one of today's most important conceptual artists will install a monumental panorama of two contrasting parts. Claude Monet's colourful and poetic 'Water Lily Pond in the Evening' from the Kunsthaus collection appears in a new guise, while in a vast, black-and-white frieze, Ai Weiwei explores the arsenal of modern warfare. In this new installation, beauty and destruction, art and war appear side by side.

Monster Chetwynd

Until spring 2028
Chipperfield building

Consisting of a monumental head more than eight metres high in the garden, the sculpture by the British artist Monster Chetwynd (b. 1973, London, lives in Zurich) is a work of art, a conceptual space, a playground and a climbing structure with a slide, all rolled into one. Inspired by the worlds of science fiction and the mysterious monsters in the Renaissance garden at Bomarzo in Italy, this first commission for the garden of the Kunsthau Zurich combines the tradition of the 'folly' with participatory art. Chetwynd is known for her light-hearted, often improvised performances and fantastical imagery. Here, once again, she employs humour and imagination to create a shared experience of art for all generations.

Pearls, ceramics, textiles, vibrant colours and vibrating patterns: welcome to the foyer of the Chipperfield building and the immersive, multifaceted world of Jeffrey Gibson (b. 1972, Colorado Springs). In 'boshulichi / inluchi – we will continue to change', painting, sculpture, screen printing and traditional indigenous techniques blend into a total work of art that encompasses the entire Foyer. Gibson, a member of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians and with Cherokee ancestors, sees tradition not as an immutable inheritance but as a living practice – open to change, new influences and the present day. This is his first work for a museum in Europe.
