Kunsthaus Zürich presents 2020 annual programme

The Kunsthaus Zürich is well placed as it heads into the new year. Bolstered by growing visitor and member numbers, it is offering a rich and varied programme in 2020: from the poetry of line via the roaring '20s to Swiss Romanticism and the resolute work of a self-confident female artist. Starting things off is a solo exhibition by Olafur Eliasson.

Three current exhibitions remain on view into the new year: 'Picasso – Gorky – Warhol' (until 5.1.20), 'Wilhelm Leibl' (until 19.1.20) and 'The new photography' (until 9.2.20).

17.1. – 22.3.20

OLAFUR ELIASSON

Olafur Eliasson (b. 1967) is one of the most important artists working today. He is developing a new site-specific installation exclusively for the Kunsthaus Zürich that will cover an exhibition area of around 1,000 m<sup>2</sup>. Its subject is the relationship between human beings and the other life-forms and species on Earth. Eliasson proposes an idea of the world based on co-existence and collaboration rather than competition, and transforms the museum into an immersive, all-encompassing totality that appeals to a variety of senses. He successfully translates these essential themes and social concerns into a formal language that not only appeals to people rationally but also touches them emotionally and moves them physically.

THE POETRY OF LINE. MASTERPIECES OF ITALIAN DRAWING

The Kunsthaus Zürich presents a selection from its small but prestigious collection of Italian drawings covering the period between Renaissance and Baroque. In addition to a familiar gem – Raphael's study for a fresco in the Vatican Palace – it reveals some previously unknown examples of the art created by Italians who have secured their place in art history, from Correggio and Guercino to Carlo Maratti. Visitors can trace the expertly drawn lines on paper and so experience as immediately as possible the genesis of an artwork.

The exhibition is being staged in association with the Institute of Art History of the University of Zurich.

OTTILIA GIACOMETTI – A PORTRAIT. WORKS BY GIOVANNI AND ALBERTO GIACOMETTI

This exhibition is devoted to Ottilia, the daughter of Giovanni and Annetta Giacometti and sister of Alberto, Diego and Bruno. It turns the spotlight on the least-known figure in the famous artist family, who died in 1937 at the age of just 33 while giving birth to her son Silvio. The presentation includes outstanding items from Swiss museums, private collections and the Fondation Alberto et Annette Giacometti (Paris), some of which have not been on view for decades – in all, 76 paintings, sculptures and drawings as well as family photos and hitherto unseen material on Ottilia and the Giacometti family.

SMOKE AND MIRRORS – THE ROARING TWENTIES. FROM JOSEPHINE BAKER TO THOMAS RUFF

The 1920s were a decade of both progression and backlash. At no time in the 20th century was the desire for change more intense. Urban visions were created and cities grew at breakneck speed. Conventional role models were questioned and upended; disadvantaged and oppressed minorities made their voices heard in politics and culture. Improved conditions for workers went hand in hand with a growing leisure industry. The spirit of innovation fed through directly into art, with experimentation in all disciplines. This exhibition considers movements such as Bauhaus, Dada, New Objectivity and the design and architecture icons of modernism together for the first time, as the Kunsthaus sheds light on the stylistic heterogeneity of those transformative years in painting, sculpture, drawing, photography, film and collage. Contemporary artists who explicitly engage with the formal language and topics of the 1920s bridge the gap to the present day. A co-production with the Festspiele Zürich. Supported by the Zürcherische Seidenindustrie Gesellschaft.

29.5. – 13.9.19

KADER ATTIA

Kader Attia was born to Algerian parents in a suburb north of Paris in 1970. The experience of living in two cultures forms the basis for his artistic practice, and his work deals with Europe and the western world's colonial past and its consequences.

His sculptures, installations, photos and videos combine high aesthetic quality with profoundly ethical concerns. They address the crises and the pressing social policy issues of our times. At the exhibition's centre is a new, monumental work that Kader Attia is creating specially for the Kunsthaus.

LANDSCAPES – PAINTING PLACES

This exhibition brings together more than 50 exceptional canvases to create a panorama of landscape painting. It includes works from the Kunsthaus's collections that were painted between 1500 and 1800 in Flanders, Holland, Italy and France by artists including Joachim Patenier, Hendrick Avercamp, Jan van Goyen, Jacob van Ruisdael, Claude Lorrain, Domenichino and Bernardo Bellotto. A novel feature is the parallel presentation of early modern landscapes by van Gogh, Segantini and Monet, who offered a different response to the vast country that the Old Masters painted so emblematically. The horizontal arrangement of their works enables the viewer to appreciate this new dimension.

WILD AT HEART: SWISS ROMANTICISM FROM FUSELI TO BÖCKLIN

From scenes of untamed nature amid the Alpine peaks to dramatic turning points in Swiss history and harrowing shipwrecks: this exhibition on Swiss Romanticism transforms the Kunsthaus Zürich into a panorama of grand emotions. With over 150 works it spans the arc from Henry Fuseli to Alexandre Calame and the early Arnold Böcklin. It reveals the considerable contribution made by Swiss artists to the development of European landscape painting and vividly showcases their awestruck contemplation of the eternal glacier ice and the sublime world of the mountains. Romanticism also opens up areas of experience that lie beyond the realm of purely rational thought. Passion, exaltation of the senses and a fascination with the unfathomable are central elements in the art of this period. They reflect an attitude to life that is currently enjoying a revival as an antidote to our over-rationalized everyday existence.

OTTILIE W. ROEDERSTEIN

During her lifetime, Ottilie Wilhelmine Roederstein (1859–1937) was a successful and independent painter whose portraits and still lifes were highly regarded. From 1883 onwards she showed her paintings successfully in Paris. In 1912 she was the only female artist representing Switzerland at the seminal international art exhibition of the Sonderbund in Cologne – alongside Giovanni Giacometti, Ferdinand Hodler and Cuno Amiet. Yet despite her once considerable international renown, Roederstein has lapsed into obscurity. Now, 83 years after her death, the Kunsthaus Zürich is staging the first monographic presentation of her work in Switzerland. Some 60 works return the artist's stylistically diverse oeuvre to the public eye after a long absence.

The exhibition is a collaboration with the Städel Museum, Frankfurt/Main.

MORE VISITORS AND MORE MEMBERS

The Kunsthaus is forecasting a rise in visitor numbers for 2019, with around 270,000 admissions as against 228,642 in 2018, while its patron association heads into the new year with an increased membership – up 5.7% to 19,688. The provisional financial statements for the year point to a balanced result overall. More precise figures will be presented at the annual general meeting of the Zürcher Kunstgesellschaft at the end of May 2020.
