Kunsthaus Zürich presents 'Gerhard Richter. Landscape'

From 26 March to 25 July 2021, the Kunsthaus Zürich celebrates the work of Gerhard Richter, with its first solo exhibition by the most important contemporary German artist. It focuses on one of the genres that is central to his oeuvre: landscape painting. On display are some 140 works, most of which are being shown for the first time in Switzerland; they include 'Townscape PX' (1968), spectacular 'Seascapes' from Berlin and Bilbao, and the energy-laden 'Jungle Picture' (1971) from a private collection. Some 80 paintings are accompanied by drawings, prints, photo collages, overpainted photographs and artist’s books from the years 1957 to 2018.

The exhibition initiated by guest curator Hubertus Butin and realized with Kunsthaus curator Cathérine Hug is arranged thematically. Extending over 1,200m², it guides visitors through the rich diversity of Richter’s creative process.

SECOND-HAND LANDSCAPES
From the outset, Richter views the landscape through a medium of mechanical reproduction: photography. The photos that form the basis for his pictures are mostly ones that he has taken himself, and he uses them to create not painted landscapes, but paintings of photographed landscapes. The specifically photographic aesthetic that informs the composition, structure and colour palette remains clearly visible, as in the oil painting 'House in Forest' (2004), with its view of the staff building at the famous hotel in Sils Maria. Thus begins his critical reflection on the lost potential of painting.

ROMANTIC IMAGES ARE ‘CUCKOO’S EGGS’
The German Romanticism of an artist such as Caspar David Friedrich is a key point of reference for some of Richter’s paintings. He draws on the aesthetic of those earlier works, depicting expansive skies and low horizons, atmospheric sunsets, misty landscapes, cloudscapes and rainbows. Yet at the same time he is compelled to question the Romantic tradition, as with ‘Ice’ (1981) which, while reminiscent of Friedrich’s ‘Sea of Ice’ (1823), can no longer function as the visible manifestation of the divine that Friedrich felt it to be. Because the atmospheric nature of many of Richter’s landscapes nevertheless prompts many to regard them as Romantic, he tellingly describes them as ‘cuckoo’s eggs’.

LANDSCAPES IN ABSTRACTION

In the 1960s and 1970s especially, Richter produced highly abstract images of mountains, parks and cities that, through painting, further explore the potential of an abstraction that has its origins in photography. These works alternate between landscape motifs depicted as reproductions of originals and a self-referential materiality of colour expressed through broad brushstrokes. This dualistic principle does not aim at a classical abstraction in which the form becomes autonomous, but rather asks to what extent the form can achieve autonomy from a basis in photographs. Measuring 250 x 680 cm, the two-part work ‘St. Gallen’ (1989) is an abstract, but the title and a horizon line running right across the picture create the association with a landscape.

LANDSCAPES AS FICTIONAL CONSTRUCTIONS

In the 1970s and 1990s, Richter also produced landscapes in the form of fictional constructions. Working in oil painting, printing, photo collages and three-dimensionality, he creates landscapes and monumental spaces that can never exist in reality but are highly suggestive. The motifs of seas, mountains and clouds have been put together in such a way that their size or arrangement transcends any real experience.

OVERPAINTED LANDSCAPES

From the 1980s onwards, Richter produces non-representational overpaintings of landscape motifs, employing a wide range of often strongly corporeal techniques including peeling, scraping, smearing and squeegeeing. The photograph of a landscape conveys a representational motif by means of reproduction, while at the same time paint is applied to the surface in such a way as to produce abstraction. These two levels of reality – including titles devoid of locational information such as ‘10. Apr. 2015’ (2015) – appear as an interlocked unity, forging a bond that is close and replete with tension, yet at the same time subtle.

LOOKING BACK AND FORWARD

In 1981 Richter said of his landscapes: Such works show my ‘longing’, they are a ‘dream of classical order and an unspoilt world.’ And indeed, the term landscape mostly comes with positive connotations. From the viewer’s perspective, all will surely agree with the assessment that there is nothing in Richter’s landscapes to offend our idea of what is ‘beautiful’. Equally, the art historian Dietmar Elger, biographer and director of the Richter Archive in Dresden, has noted a subversive element in Richter’s statement from 1970 that he wanted, in his landscapes, to paint ‘something beautiful’; at the time, other artistic movements such as Pop Art... and conceptual art as well as politically motivated works were setting the tone. Richter was bucking the trend.

LANDSCAPES IN UNEASY TIMES
Our appreciation of landscapes and their aesthetic quality increases with the onset of industrialization and the emergence of tourism in the 19th century; and they come to be increasingly important and valued as they are devastated by wars and environmental disasters. The contemplation of both art and landscapes evokes strong feelings. The year 2021 is set to be dominated by the corona crisis, the most tangible consequences of which, at a personal level, are social distancing and limitations on mobility. Scheduling the exhibition at this time offers a glimmer of hope. A visit to the Kunsthaus Zürich is a clear reminder of the value of sensory experiences within a community away from virtual worlds and screens – especially when, translated into a spatial and therefore physical experience, they become surfaces onto which our longings and thoughts are projected – as is the case with Gerhard Richter’s landscapes.
